WIRELESS TELECOMMUNICATIONS BUREAU ANNOUNCES CELLULAR WEBSITE REDESIGN

The Federal Communications Commission's Wireless Telecommunications Bureau announces the redesign of its Cellular Radiotelephone (Cellular) service website located at the URL <http://wireless.fcc.gov/services/cellular/>. The new site employs the retooled navigational structure and layout designed to improve usability for all bureau service websites. The design used for the website emphasizes and better organizes the information most frequently sought by cellular licensees and members of the general public interested in cellular issues. Site visitors will find quick and easy access to:

- Consolidated Data Resources – including service coverage maps, market area maps and cross references, annual Commercial Mobile Radio Services (CMRS) Competition Reports, and bandplan information.
- Licensing Process Details – a step-by-step summary, filing procedures, FCC rules and requirements, and current methods for obtaining spectrum.
- Spectrum Auction Recaps and Updates – listings of cellular auctions and links to historical auction data, including winning bidders.
- Operational Information – technology overviews, operational issues, and consumer information on fraud, blocking, jamming, and tips for finding service providers.
- Part 22 Review – a summary of the Commission's pending proceeding to amend Part 22 to modify or eliminate regulations that have become outdated as a result of technological change, increased competition in the CMRS, supervening changes to related Commission rules, or a combination of these factors.

Also, for user convenience, the bureau compiles, lists, and provides access to recent official FCC documents related to cellular rules and licensing on a releases page.

The redesign is part of the bureau's continuing effort to enhance web-based services for the public.
